This course will continue to explore the progress in theory within the Ego Psychological School that predominated in the United States after World War II. The readings are obviously just a sampling. The first five weeks will follow the mainstream development of that theory as it evolved into “Modern Ego Psychology” and “Modern Conflict Theory”, including the increasing effects of “cross fertilization” from other theories. The last five weeks will look further at some of the challenges to this model and the effects of the influence of other psychoanalytic theories and other psychological models on Ego Psychological and Conflict theory.
