We believe psychoanalysis to be an essential tool for understanding the human mind. The majority of our training candidates become psychoanalytic practitioners, but all mental health professionals can benefit from psychoanalytic training. Some of our clinical graduates work in such fields as forensics, psychopharmacology, and organizational psychology. Our graduates credit psychoanalytic training with making them better all-around clinicians, more ably equipped to respond to the full dimensions of their patients' problems.

We have the largest number of candidates of any institute affiliated with the American Psychoanalytic Association in the New York area. We are known in particular for helping candidates develop the best possible clinical skills. The psychoanalytic program comprises four years of courses (mainly Saturday mornings); supervised case work; and one's personal psychoanalysis. The Open House is for MD's, Ph.D.'s, clinical social workers, and graduate students in these disciplines who would like to learn more about psychoanalytic training.
